Murray Clayton, vicar, public to the Hughes-Mitchell plant. requires only 24 hours to Power from Boulder dam will pay an important part in the operation of the Hughes-Mitchell Processes Company's Torrance plant on Normandie avenue, according to E. P. Querl, industrial commissioner for the Los Angeles chamber of commerce.

A new process, such as is employed in the Hughes-Mitchell FIESTA DE LAS FLORES.

A new process, such as is em-ployed in the Hughes-Mitchell plant, requires only 24 hours to refine ores, all under one roof, and the Torrance plant is the first of its kind.

the Torrance plant is the first of its kind.

Under the old method, Queri explained, ore reduction required 48 days, each step taking place at widely different places, in the country.

Queri explained the favorable factors in the development of the Los Angeles metropolitan area, which takes in Torrance. First, it attracts large concerns because it is the center of a great buying, power; second it is favorably surrounded by areas with many raw products, particularly oil; third that the harbor offers cheap shipping facilities, and further, that abundant power from Boulder dam will shortly be available for manufacturing plants.
